Characteristics: Leadership is one of their aptitudes. An addiction to power is possible in powerful people and they can be dominating in the event that they develop that characteristic. The Sun Card has the opportunity to go to great heights in this lifespan and this is the Eight of Diamonds. People look up to them, respect them and their work whether they are famous or not. Standing out from the crowd and being noticed is something they enjoy. Power and control issues with other people and the way they work out their karma are significant. Being controlled is something they do not like and they try to maintain the superior position in relationships. Occasionally they have a pushy personality because they occupy the Eighth position in the Crown Line and are very independent. For the Queen of Spades Karma Card these are keywords. They have a strong desire to learn and explore and are sharp mentally. There is not much they cannot achieve and very few issues they cannot overcome if they elect to work for something. If not abused, they are able to conquer and rule and this power brings them satisfaction. Because they have power, some Eight of Diamonds are fearful or have a distaste for the responsibility that comes with it. Much of their natural talent and potential is forfeited in this case. They are good negotiators and are aware of the value of things. Power pertains to money for many Eight of Diamonds. They may become addicted to spending money and both genders are capable of quickly spending huge sums. They are extreme shoppers. They deal with stress by shopping it seems. They can achieve anything by using their excellent intuition and hard work. They are capable of both inner peace and inner power, thus allowing for self-mastery if they learn to direct power back inwardly toward personal transformation, and resist trying to change the world.

Relationships: Generally speaking, they go after what they desire because they know what it is. Sadly, eventually what they want changes. Their relationships should be placed behind careers in most cases. When they attempt to have a relationship more significant than their work, they often lose a bit of their power. Individuals of the Club suit are better for both genders. Many blessings come from being less attached in the realm of love. They lean toward indecision and are fickle as far as love relationships go. Change can happen because of an independent nature, but the Eight of Diamonds resists. Others, who cannot make a commitment either, can be attracted to them. Many Eight of Diamonds have one monogamous relationship after another. Multiple marriages are possible. One person often cannot satisfy their desire for variety in love. They should express themselves without trying to reinvent others and learn to give others freedom. Furthermore, they need give themselves the love they want from others and to accept themselves as they actually are. Abandonment is a fear they must let go of. They must not push loved ones with their abundance of power. Challenges like these are some of their greatest obstacles.

Personality Connections: Heart women often want the Eight of Diamonds male and he receives blessings from Club women. Spade females have the greatest compatibility, although it is important to check the Birth Card relationships individually before drawing any firm conclusions. A Spade man, particularly if he is powerful and well respected is good for Eight of Diamonds females and they have a good disposition for married life too. Lifelong friends can be found in Heart men.

Confrontations: A big happy, sunny face is present in most Eight of Diamond individuals. That sunny appearance radiates from their faces. Tammy Faye Bakker, Dolly Parton and Loni Anderson are Eight of Diamond women. These Eight of Diamonds women share some physical attributes. A somewhat similar appearance is even shared. It is easier to see why these women share basically the same look if we keep in mind that the Eight of Diamonds is the Sun Card.
