This combination likes to intimidate people, but in spite of that they have a loving side. The country life far from the madding crowd is the ideal environment in the mind of the Buffalo. They are loners. This does not match the view of the Aquarius at all. That part of their character is sociable and genial. Their approach to life is much more supple and open to variation. This creates a combination that is far from being ideal. The Aquarius-Buffalo has a rough road in life because it has a rebellious side emanating from the Buffalo. There is a battle in the psyche between a worldview that is fairly inflexible and one that is flaky. The life of an Aquarius-Buffalo is very frequently filled with numerous challenges and obstacles that need to be overcome. The dialectic of this combination is among the more conflicted. The Aquarian is cool, calm and collected but there is a side that is immovable. Hiding in the psyche of the Aquarian side is a touch of bigotry in spite of them often residing in fantasyland. What all this means in the long run is that the Aquarius-Buffalo has some fairly negative emotions to deal with. These include grouchiness, mood swings, resentment and acrimony. Added to this is an appearance of indifference that often is not real.

Romance: The odd part of all this is that this combination seems to totally accept this life situation. One reason is success. Once this is accomplished the need for activity, change and challenge returns. Perhaps they can handle a life with essentially no sex. The intruding problems from the outside world such as work are stifled. Regret and disappointment are ignored. The love life of the Aquarius-Buffalo is, predictably, fraught with problems. The Aquarius wants a lot of action because they are prone to ennui. The Buffalo side of this combination is a homebody. They desire the security of home. This push by the Buffalo for home and probably children can generate a yo-yo emotional state. Up and down the Aquarius-Buffalo goes in their romance.
