The Sun and Moon in your combination are in conflict, designating that your early life was likely hard. A potent sense of independence and self-sufficiency in you came about as the result of that struggle to overcome those hardships. It also caused you to look far inside yourself. You are self-examining unlike most Leos, and the realization you have acquired from looking within inspires you to reach out to help others. You have a very tender, almost naive presence and disposition that is relaxed but a bit aloof. The commonplace details of life do not perturb or confuse you, because your scope of imagination is wide, boundless, and abstract. Others would be very surprised if they saw the ambition, strength, and futuristic visions in your dreams. All this is kept enshrouded under that effortless exterior. Your judgment is seldom fooled by self-centered views or superficial impressions because you are able to acknowledge your limits and appreciate your many endowments. With your firm idealism and compassionate perspectives, you probably feel that you are destined to help others in life. You pursue that goal with silent and steadfast purpose, whatever that mission may be. All you needed to do was see it once. You have noteworthy intuition and inherent aptitude that often controls your action even though you value reason. Your preferences and major choices are generally founded on what you feel about the individual or situation rather than what you conceive. This total belief in your intuition can be dangerous at times, both for you and others. You can be led by your hunches to a point in managerial positions, but you have to also be aware of the facts. Being more adaptable to the pressures and opinions of others is something you should learn. Never ostentatious or arrogant, you treat people as peers, and you in all likelihood live in a humble, understated way, but there is something which sets you apart others. Some people think you have a special insight because your unique manner of life gives you an effortless air of nonchalance, and people are attracted to you. A lot of Leo-Aquarians are natural leaders. Helping you to put some of those ambitions and sights into action is your resourcefulness and inner force. Your solution to an issue is often the cleverest and you are inventive and forward thinking. One reason why you often seem so out of it and forgetful is you see things from a very wide and detached perspective. You favor the big picture and details slow you down.
