

Sun in Leo/Moon in Libra:

Grandstander

You are prevented from seeing the world as it actually is because of this overly optimistic vision. You become disoriented and nervous when actual reality interrupts. You expect everyone to be naturally kind, dependable, and compassionate like you are, and this interferes with your judgment. You have already learned, no doubt, that many people are not up to your personal standards. People are attracted to your friendly personality and even-tempered nature. You are sociable and pleasant. When you are in a position that requires tact or have center stage you thrive. You help to settle problems and disagreement with grace and a calm manner, as do most Leos. Your view of life is dreamy and romantic. Fortunately, your naive innocence as well as good nature and charm, usually brings out the best in others and works to your benefit as well. It is not easy for the Leo-Libra to be a person in charge, but they have strong leadership drives. You worry about hurting people's feelings and you dislike infringing on anyone else's territory. Furthermore, you always want to be admired by everybody. You never do anything until you have heard everyone's opinion so decision-making is also hard. You naturally dedicate a lot of time to recreation and sensual enjoyment because both signs of this combination love comfort and leisure. However, idleness can become a way of life, particularly when you feel you are not getting all the acknowledgment you merit. Professions that offer prestige you do well in. Excellent choices are cinema, the arts, marketing, and design. In addition, you would be good in all fields involving adjudicating conflicts or settling differences. You are perplexed when viewpoints conflict, as they always do. You just go with your Leo hunch most of the time. Pride is a very powerful aspect in your combination, and you often see yourself by the way others see you, instead of the way you really are. You can build up a very repressed and self-conscious attitude if you get too much criticism at some point in your life. Remembering that your view is just as correct as anyone else's helps maintain a sturdy and healthy self-image. Refrain from giving so much credence to what other people may be thinking. You assure your many friends with your natural charm, but your endless need for compliments and approval may drain them. You run the risk of backsliding into states of indecisiveness, anxiety, and worst of all, weariness, when you feel unacknowledged.
