

Sun in Taurus/Moon in Aries:

Self-Absorbed

You are intense in your pursuit of a goal once you are clear that it is what you want. You seek it out directly. You set out to get your way and nothing, not even most scrupulous people, can stop you. They dare not even try. If you want it, then it is right. That is the nature of a Taurus-Aries. You could, theoretically, have destructive tendencies, but they are held back by your natural caution. If you can find a way to justify your self-interest, you can make allowances for others and compromise. Controlling your own life path and being in charge of your destiny is what you really desire. You are basically a worldly person who wants to have a secure, comfortable and pleasurable life. Under your confident and controlled exterior, you are masking your irrationality and unruliness. To satisfy your desires you need to struggle. You have some strong desires and you must work very hard. Yes, you might be caring, polite and gentle to people, but you are your own main concern. Your basic nature is one of being determined and controlled. You do not think of spiritual issues. You take an inventory of what you have and after that you proceed to collect everything possible and acquire all the power and status you can. As with many things, anxiety and hostility can be dealt with through constructive means such as sports, including tennis, for example. This does not mean you should try to be more competitive though. A little competition is fine, but coming out on top is not the meaning of life. Go exploring for other realms such as the spiritual, psychological and academic. Find out what life is really about by expanding your perspectives. It is not merely about possessions. Do not let prejudice and impulsive behavior be your guide. Loosen up and open your mind and your heart to the others' views and feelings. Furthermore, it is possible for you to achieve this because of your firmness and ability. You have a great aptitude to persuade people of things and it comes naturally for you. Your presence sometimes intimidates others. Temper is among the faults that can get in your way. Suppressing feelings comes easily for most Taurians, but not for you. You sometimes quickly get angry and are subject to anxiety, neither of which can be ignored for long. Working together with others, being patient and tolerant are things you must learn.
